Life at the FUV

by Magnus Thyvold

There are a few interesting highlights in this month's programming. March brings a new environmental show, International Women's Day, women's basketball, and more.

Premiering this month is a new 13 part series Cycles of the Sound produced by Bellingham's Environmental Perspectives. This series focuses on water quality issues concerning the Puget Sound/southwest British Columbia region. Nearly five million people live in this area, and effect dramatically the region's lakes rivers and waterways. The series will look at the pressures on our aquatic ecosystems and what can, and needs to, be done to protect them. Cycles of the Sound hits the air waves every Friday at 2pm starting March 5.

Perceptive readers will have noticed that is the time slot Chenee Bamford's W.A.R. aired. Unfortunately, Chenee is moving on (hopefully, to greener pastures) so we will no longer be blessed by her unique blend of politics and critical thinking.

March 8th is International Women's Day and we hope to bring you a special day of women's programming. At press time, full details hadn't been worked out, but stay tuned to CFUV for more information.

CFUV will be broadcasting Vikes Games from the CIAU Women's National Basketball Finals which are being held in Victoria this year. The Vikes are currently undefeated this season and are looking very good to claim another championship for UVic. CFUV will be covering the Vikes opening game on Friday, March 12 at 8:30pm and the their second game on Saturday at 6pm or 8pm, depending on Friday's result.

Our political activism program, Into the Streets, has hit the ground running after its debut last month. Producers Tom, Jezebel and Chris would like to remind us that they are very interested in hearing from activist groups or individuals about their activities, upcoming protests and demonstrations and anything else of interest to the politically aware listener. They can be contacted either by mail to Into the Streets c/o CFUV or by calling CFUV (721-8702) and leaving a message. ▲

In the Hole

Greetings brothers & sisters, young & old, phlegmatic & sanguine, dry & moist, fragrant & smelly.

Many vital fluids have been shed in the production of this wretched issue. It is the freshly sprouted, illegitimate fruit of someone's loins, which now hangs heavy and swollen on a sagging vine. So consume as you would a sacramental food product. It may taste a little bland, but just keep eating, for the tribulation is at hand. Yes, great woes have befallen this humble publication. The very fabric of Offbeat's editorial staff has come unravelled, leaving an inexperienced control freak of questionable moral fibre quivering at the helm.

But fear not, huddled masses. There is salvation. And with all salvation, comes submission. Indeed, personal power can be yours if you SUBMIT to the Offbeat. A thousand cultural icons can now be at your mercy. Your previously worthless opinions, brainchildren, artistic expression, and conspiracy theories are in demand. Upon seeing your name in print, you can instantly receive the respect and, yes, sex appeal that has previously been denied. Take it from me, gentle reader, Tom Vu now waxes my ear hair and loves it! All it takes is a short, buttock-firming jaunt to the top floor of the SUB (Satanic Undulating Behemoth) to harness this tool of cataclysmic power and intrigue.

So it is written, so it shall be done. ▲

Scene Ventage

by Jason Flower

Well, our editor quit. Great. I got a full time job. Great. I'm always late handing in this column. Great. Welcome to Scene Ventage. I've been very busy this past month so bear with me if I've missed anything. Here's the scoop on the local music scene...

News...Contempt, Victoria's only true punk band, have broken up. Their last show, with Thumbscrew and Laffing Stock, was incredible. Steve (bass) is moving to Vancouver to play guitar with ex-Peanut Gallery members. Wolf (guitar) is now in Enrage. Spiral Jetty are waiting for their contracts to arrive from their apparent label. Banana Royal is going through line-up changes. Tall Guy Short Guy have broken up. Wire Bastard are reformed with new members (apparently two from Banana Royal). The new Laffing Stock is out and sounds like a completely different band. And most importantly, there is a new punk record store in Duncan called AREA 51. It's run by Gordon Chow. The address is 163 Station Street. Phone 746-8869. Check it out!

Changes... Steve (bass) has left Enrage to join up with Harold and Jode. Scott has replaced Steve. Christmas is now called Santa. Hung10 are now called $ix Cent$ and are releasing a tape soon.

Progress...Gadget recorded at NG recently. Lost Cause and Pigment Vehicle recorded at Dollhouse recently. Cow With A Blade recorded at Sporadic recently. More have great shirts for $12.00. The Hump 7" is godlike. Hump deserve a few lines for their theatrical set in Vancouver. Nude saxophone playing, spitting on the crowd, peeing on Arish, shooting heroin, she-male porno videos, and the inevitable crowd attacking the band! A great show, and a crowd full of uptight assholes. Scrape Chamber are planning to record an LP. Nanaimo's Intellectual Heterosexuals play grungy-funk and are excellent musicians. Sidknee Spitt have shirts out.

New bands... Noah McNayr is Mr. Sunshine. His younger brother is in a punk band that was called Naswar (I don't think they have a new name yet). The Apes is ex-Kye Bay members. Parksville homes Three Old Cows and an apparent punk band that I'm yet to find out the name of. Check out Coiler. Watch for Scherzophrenia with Josh (ex-Big Sounder Chainsaw) on vocals. There are a few bands hiding around Duncan, Cobble Hill, and Shawnigan Lake. The only one I could get a name out of was Grimace. Watch out for Jeffrey Sez and Barrier.

Across the water... The new Thumbscrew rules. New Hushpuppy tape. Check out Man. Superconductor just recorded another LP. The Lung CD is out. Big Gulp rule. New Kreviss 7" is out. When in Vancouver, go to Scratch Records and buy everything. Read Vancouver Special in Discorder for more on Vancouver.

Blast From the Local Past : The Human Torch by 5 On A Date.

This month I'm looking for the Dayglow Abortions' Out of the Womb LP, Vancouver Complication, and old local tapes.

Thank you so much to everyone who reads this column. Please pass on news and tapes c/o CFUV.

P.S. Listen to Only in Victoria, Wednesdays from 2:30 - 3 p.m. Bye! ▲

ARE YOU READY FOR THE COUNTRY?

"Country music is white soul music," said Gram Parsons, the late country-rock legend, and in many ways he was right. As much as any type of music, genuine country music must come from the heart, and is an attempt by the artist to share his or her experiences. This leaves the musician open to ridicule – it's a fine line between sincere and maudlin, and much of commercial country music is so calculatingly emotional that it borders on parody. But when we hear an old Hank Williams song about being lonesome, it makes us uncomfortable to hear someone expose his feeling so nakedly. This was no witty phrase-turner writing songs from 9 to 5 and then going home to a loving family - these are the feelings he lived and died with.

Like punk, rap and early rock and roll, country music gains much of its appeal from its accessibility. Thousands of dollars and years of music training aren't needed for these grass roots forms of music. Performers are not necessarily judged on talent or technique but on energy, commitment and how close they come to some unspoken connection with their audience. But as these forms gain mass popularity and are incorporated into the music industry they are often robbed of everything that gave them their power. Punk becomes New Wave. Rap loses its political anger and gains Hammer and Kriss Kross as leaders. And country moves to Nashville.

Country music experienced a rapid increase in popularity during the years following World War II. Live radio programs and local recording artists gained popularity across Canada and the U.S., with each area having its own style, sound, and regional influences, but as country became a big, money-making industry record companies consolidated in Nashville, making it virtually impossible for non-Nashville country artists to make a living or gain popularity. And predictably everything coming out of Nashville began to sound more and more alike. At the same time radio stations began forming rigid programming formats, i.e. top 40, easy listening, country. In the decades before this a radio station might have played a blues program right after a country barn dance; often the music flowed into each other as the different styles borrowed from one another, covering each other's songs and adapting their instrumentation. But soon, with the segmentation of music, a song had to fit a strict definition of style and topic to get played on a country station. Country music became almost exclusively music for and by whites, with no recognition or acceptance of outside influences.

These changes will sound familiar to anyone who has ever had to listen to a "classic rock" station. Rock's diversity of styles and influences is stripped away to achieve a comfortable mainstream sound. The programmers have no interest in the music except as a marketing tool; a certain style of music is calculated to attract a stable demographic listening group, who can then be sold to advertisers. Classic rock stations recycle familiar sounding music to ensure that they don't offend their listening market or advertisers. Whether it's the Rolling Stones or the Black Crowes, an image of just enough rebellion can be safely projected. The result is the boring repetition of the same old poses. The same thing has been happening to commercial country music over the past 30 years - a stable, familiar sound where real innovation is virtually unheard of in case it offends the listening audience. The result is the pablum you hear when you turn to a country radio station today.

So, like CFUV listeners already know, the best music is going on outside of commercial radio. Artists like Guy Clark and Pat Temple act in country's true tradition - they incorporate blues, rock, jazz and whatever else it takes to complete their vision. Stepping away from Garth Brooks, who demonstrates his musical depth by covering Billy Joel power ballads, you find alternative country-rockers the Lost Dakotas who play cookin' versions of old Hank Snow tunes. Bands like the Grievous Angels breathe life into Canada's traditional fiddle tunes and weave them into their vision of today's world. And all of this goes on almost completely ignored by commercial radio and the big record companies.

Real country music is still worth listening to. It deals with the problems and joys of modern living. So don't be fooled by what commercial radio tries to sell you – a bit of digging brings great musical rewards. ▲

Reggae News

by Clay

It's been a very busy couple of months in Victoria's Reggae scene. CFUV and Rasta Pod enjoyed presenting the first Reggae Sunsplash Tour to come to Victoria. Also, Toronto's Fujahtive, and England's Maxi Priest washed up on our shores.

Early Bird Warning.... Once again the Island will skank for two days at the Third Annual Island Reggae Fest at Providence Farm on July 3rd. For general information, call 743-3675 or 388-5777.

Musango Rolls Into Town.... Marimba madness swept Victoria last March when Musango played to a sold-out audience at Harpo's. Since then, the band has toured the U.S. extensively, and are returning to Victoria's Herman's Jazz Club on Saturday, March 27. Musango (pronounced Moo-sahn-go) means "in the forest". Their repertoire is strongly rooted in the Marimba music of the Shona people of Zimbabwe, where Musango have spent a lot of time studying their craft. Bring your dancing shoes!▲

POPULAR SECRET RADIO PHRASES

by Don Bergland

How many times have you been listening to your favorite radio program when the announcer suddenly says something that sounds like a foreign language? "Baroosta pwit nookfax!" Who can understand that? This is extremely frustrating for those who do not know how to translate the secret language frequently used by radio announcers. To help translate these phrases when you hear them, we offer a continuing series of Popular Secret Radio Phrases. We hope this helps make "radio listening" even more enjoyable.

Secret Radio Phrase #1: De pwat ala fwa, con doom peer doosh?

Translation: I didn't know the knob turned that way?

Secret Radio Phrase #2: Meatwah pew toe calhoot too kwat doodoo?

Translation: Are you sure that's where I wear the headphones?

Secret Radio Phrase #3: Horstew nay reen foo shitaki pit?

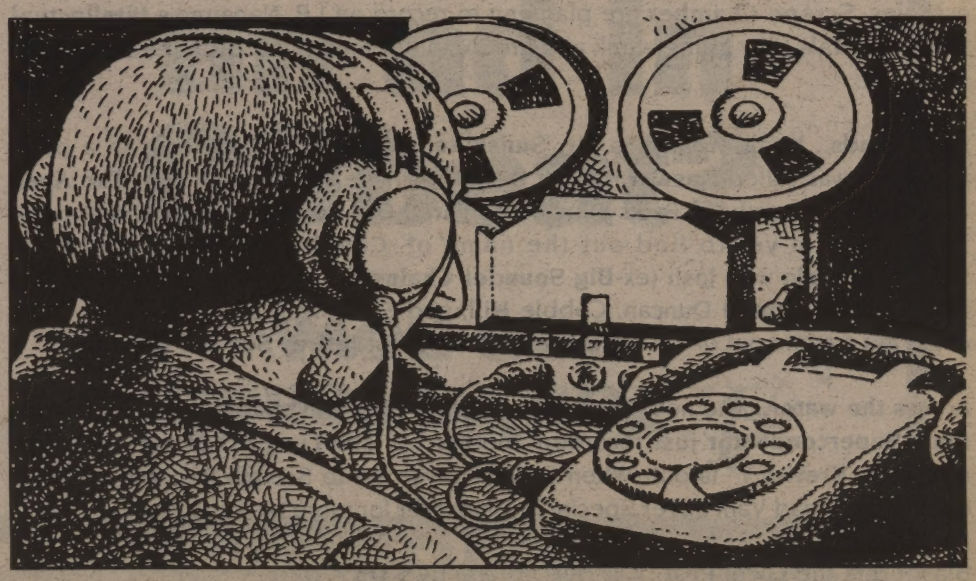
Translation: You mean I need a funnel too?

Secret Radio Phrase #4: Le CD bono yugeen slavrutpik.

Translation: That CD sounds good enough to suck.

Secret Radio Phrase #5: Raw goo! Slatnip coito moornot fin backwah?

Translation: Excuse me! Won't that plug up the microphone? ▲



1000 MILES TO GO WITH JR. GONE WILD

Interview by: Brad Pareis
Transcribed by: Doug McKay
Written by: Kevin Butler

Almost thirty, Mike McDonald is the only original member of Edmonton's Jr. Gone Wild since its inception ten years ago. The band consists of Mike (vocals, guitar, and most of the writing), Dove (bass), Chris Smith (guitar), and Larry Shelast (drums). During this latest tour, they were accompanied by Jane Holly but she left. Mike felt that the music suffered, so they recruited Kathryn Rose of the Toronto band Wind May Be Damaged. Kathryn also did vocals on their latest recording, Pull the Goalie, and Mike feels that she's "very versatile."

Jr. Gone Wild played in excess of 200 gigs in 1992. During the month of April, they toured Europe and, according to the band, they were well received. Mike adds, "Not many Canadian bands tour there so it was somewhat of a novelty act for them." Apparently they were interviewed on community radio in Slovenia, where everyone heard them including the border guards. According to the band, the border patrol wanted to party with them as they tried to leave the country. According to McDonald, they do pretty well everywhere but "Saskatoon and Regina need their ass kicked.... Last time we played Saskatoon we had people that wanted to hear Social Distortion tunes and we were fucked." Ever since touring regularly back in 1986, they have consistently gained popularity with the Campus crowd. They find it difficult (time-wise) to play a lot of material from their earlier recordings, especially when they play for only forty minutes a night as the opening act.

Mike feels that their country-edged alternative sound is comparative in attitude and taste to that of the Beat Farmers (minus Country Dick Montana). Otherwise it is a conglomeration of other people's influences and tastes and who writes the music. You'd be hard-pressed to pigeonhole their sound, even though a lot of their songs seem to be about drinking, falling down, and relationships.

Mc Donald doesn't agree that they are pure country or a parody band poking fun at country music. "I got into music because I fell in love with the rock n' roll dream. In my youth I made some mistakes and now I'm trapped into this sort of lifestyle, but I can't complain because I'm having a good time," explains Mc Donald.

Surprizing to some, Mike started out in the underground punk rock scene "doing halls and gigs back in '78 or '79...and now I'm making maybe $150/week at what I'm doing," laughs McDonald. He's quite intense and determined to make Jr. Gone Wild popular, apparent in the amount of time and energy he's put into the band.

On selling out, Mike states, "Everyone has to eventually somehow, someway. There's no way around it.... If you are going to do this for your living and actively pursue it and try to elevate your profile to a point where you've got a large audience, there's certain compromises that have to made and there's no way around it. and the best you can hope for is to make sure you still have your underwear when its all over...make sure it's your underwear." He adds, "People say that if you get paid for what you do then that's a sell-out. Unless you're some absolute saint there's no way of avoiding it....certain degrees of success have to affect you. You can't stay the same."

At one time, Island Records was interested in Jr. Gone Wild to the point where they signed a letter of intent and fronted the band $5,000. However, the New York office decided not to sign them, so they kept the money, tore up the contract and everyone was happy.

The band recently released a video for "Rhythm of the Rain" (from Pull The Goalie) which has generated some airplay on Much Music and will hopefully translate into more public recognition. When asked about the religious overtones of some of Jr. Gone Wild's music, Mike replied, "I'm the son of a soldier in the armed forces, we're Irish-Catholics and it's something I think about....what's my existence compared to the rest of the universe. It's not a preaching thing and I'm not advocating one belief or another - it's just me thinking out loud." He adds, "Those songs that have religious references are usually those that ask questions rather than statements, or that's the way I intended it." Rather than getting irritated by people constantly interpreting his lyrics, he welcomes the interpretations and difference of opinions. You can check out their latest, Pull the Goalie, available on Stony Plain Records ,or go and see them March 4th at Harpo's, and make your own interpretation. You won't be disappointed. ▲

red Hot! 'N' blues

reviews of current R&B releases

The vocal group (or Doo-Wop) music is very much alive today, with all the new reissues coming out. First let me recommend Jay Warner's excellent Billboard Book Of American Singing Groups which was published in December 1992. As the editor restricts the length of this column, let me get to the CD releases, and I'll review the book at another time.

MCA's new two CD set dedicated to Curtis Mayfield (MCA 10664: Curtis Mayfield & The Impressions: The Anthology), the Spiders' complete recordings (Bear Family 15673: The Imperial Sessions), and Relic Records' continuing CD series all point out the great diversity of blues available to us.

The Spiders were originally a gospel group formed around the Carbo Brothers, Hayward & Leonard. Under the guidance of the ace production team of Dave Bartholomew & Cosimo Matassa, they recorded some of the greatest '50s New Orleans music of all time. Unlike other vocal group recordings, the musical accompaniment stands out - great Lee Allen & Herb Hardesty tenor sax solos, and that wonderful New Orleans style drumming of Earl Palmer & Charles "Hungry" Williams! Here you have a mature group of voices (each member in their mid/late 20s), singing out in perfect gospel harmony, with mostly Mr. Hayward Carbo singing lead. Recordings like "I Didn't Want To Do It", "True", "Witchcraft", "You're The One" are considered classics today. Mr. Hayward Carbo, "the voice of New Orleans," is still singing and recording toady, and appeared on a recent Dr. John CD, though relegated to singing harmony with the Neville Brothers. There are excellent notes by Rick Coleman, first hand interviews with group members, unissued sides including their rare elusive gospel release and a complete discography. This two CD set is a must for everyone, not just for vocal group fans.

Now on to the Impressions. Curtis Lee Mayfield, born in 1942 in Chicago, had just turned 19 years old when he took his 'impressions' into a studio in 1961 and began recording for the ABC Paramount label some of the greatest songs of the '60s soul movement. Robert Pruter's compiled this two CD set as a tribute to Mayfield's recordings as lead singer of The Impressions, recordings as a solo artist and, most important of all, his extraordinary songwriting ability. Mr. Pruter's restricts his notes to the music at hand but if you want to know more about Mr. Mayfield's extensive production work, and his early days with Jerry Butler, check out Mr. Pruter's excellent book, Chicago Soul (University of Illinois Press, 1990). As for the music, you couldn't ask for a better contrast with The Spiders. Here you have Mr. Mayfield's light guitar playing, the interweaving call-and-response of fellow Impressions Sam Gooden & Fred Cash and those great songs: "People Get Ready", "Gypsy Woman", "I'm So Proud", and "I've Been Trying." This two CD set is rounded out by a few of Mr. Mayfield's solo recordings such as "Superfly" and "Freddie's Dead" but it's those great songs with The Impressions that he'll be remembered for. As I'm writing this, Shanachie Records has just announced a CD, People Get Ready: A Tribute To Curtis Mayfield. Today Mr. Mayfield lives in Atlanta, unable to perform due to a serious accident in August 1990. He is overseeing the release of his recordings through John Abbey's Atlanta-based Ichiban organization.

Relic Records has just released CDs by The Kodaks (7037), The Nutmegs (7038), The Turbans (7039), The Moonglows (7042), Patti Labelle & The Bluebelles (7043/44). Each CD has notes concerning the history of the group, sometimes biographical details, and most often contains the complete recordings for a certain label. Relic is known for seeking out master tapes & legally releasing vocal group recordings, and for that we should all be grateful. What can I say about these groups? Al Banks (of The Turbans) & Leroy Griffin (of The Nutmegs) both have great voices, and if you enjoy the '50s Doo-Wop sound, these 2 releases are a must. The Kodaks feature 15-year-old Pearl McKinnon, an early female lead and she does an excellent job of capturing that 'kid lead' sound. As for The Moonglows set, this is a live 1971 recording of Bobby Lester's group, mostly acappella, with very few notes. The Bluebelles featured the first recordings of diva Patti Labelle. Here we have "Down The Aisle", "I Walk Alone", and lots of standards (a little too many for my liking) but on original tunes, they can really shout. Great liner notes.

Well, I'd better sign out. Next time, new releases by Bobby Blue Bland, Lester Davenport, Big John Greer, Elmore James, Joe Hill Louis, Percy Mayfield, Roy Milton, Junior Parker, John Primer, Big Al Sears, Lonnie Shields, Big Mama Thornton and O.V. Wright. Remember to Let The Good Times Roll every Wednesday night and Thursday afternoon, and Buddy Guy will be in Vancouver at the Commodore, April 14. ▲

On Being Female In The '90s

by Pat A. Burns

Some 20 years after feminism first raised her irate head, she is surely thumping it now in frustration. Progress toward gender equality has been minimal, as recent Times Colonist articles demonstrate.

Times Colonist stories with titles like "Winning Looks," "Unzippedy Do Da Designers Bare Spring," "Rising Star Bemoans Degradation of Women in Films," and "Rheaume Leads Poll as the Year's Top Sports Oddity" graced the pages of the Dec. 24 and 31 issues. And their import goes beyond filling space.

Collectively and unintentionally, these headlines shriek the contradictions of the '90s woman's role. Their authors, two female and one male, are Times-Colonist staff. The fact that two of the writers are women does not guarantee a non-sexist story. One of the female journalists also perpetuates the myth that the average woman is content to permit the exploitation of her physical attributes to the lowest common denominator of both male and female sensibilities.

The author of "Unzippedy," suggests that the latest designers' dictates will stimulate women to "relieve their sexual boredom." (Whose boredom is being pandered to here?) The apparent "look" for Spring of '93 is intentionally unzipped, unbuttoned, and see-thru dresses, tunics, pants and even bikinis. T-C's fashion reporter said today's "middle-aged matrons," products (there's a dehumanizing term) of the sexual revolution of the 1960s and 1970s, "have done it all and are bored."

"The obvious solution," she went on to say, "is to make sex seem wicked and forbidden again, and here's where you get unbuttoned buttons and see-thru everything." Even Madonna's recent book got honorary mention in the article. In support for the unzipped look, the reporter discussed how sex has become a routine subject—its mechanisms can be described by children, its psychological effect is lauded by sex therapists, and the how-to's of its hygienic aspects are readily accessible information, as it should be for safety's sake. However, the above arguments are blatant examples of media-cracy: another concerted attempt to tell us what to think and to judge women as frivolous.

The reality-gap is furthered by the second female reporter in the same issue (Section E, page 1-2, December 24, 1992). The article "Winning Looks" factually demonstrates both sides of the real-life woman vs. her media-image in the world of hairstyles. Apparently Victoria's W. Greg Young was voted Canada's best hairstylist (out of a field of 55) at the recent Hair '92 competition. His award-winning looks included short and curly styles resembling the "tendrils" of the 1700s, a "Joan Crawford set" of the 1940s, and an "avant-garde" (who's putting who on here?) Medusa; as if women want to be reminded of those misogynistic eras. However, Mr. Young's approach to his clients is to "understand their lifestyles and design concepts based on their physical attributes." His biggest challenge, Young stated, is to focus on styles that require minimal fussing: most women have very tight schedules and tell him so. He deserves a bouquet at least, for recognizing and responding to the needs of a '90s woman, although he is also the author of other styles which try to take us by the "short and curlies."

From the media hype of fashion and hairstyles, the discerning reader takes on the third article of the same T-C issue: "Rising Star Bemoans Degradation of Women in Films," by the male reporter. The article describes actress Adrienne Shelley, who had come to Sooke in November to star in a movie shoot there, as a "pampered and promiscuous movie star who flees to oceanside Canadian bed-and-breakfast getaway with an alcoholic rock star." (Yawn.) Shelley said the Hollywood double standard still exists with a vengeance. Their myopic moguls continue to offer a multitude of similarly degrading roles to women; many scenes (you guessed it) typically require the women to be naked, but not the men. She, herself has been repeatedly offered such roles, but has refused at the expense of the income. On the other hand, Shelley has her own New York theatre company in which she writes, directs and appears in plays like Missing Children, and Morgan Fitting In — about a man who is suffering from a spiritual pain that the world fails to notice. It would be revolutionary for the U.S. film world to substitute a firm focus on reality for their pornographic fantasy fixations.

We need more actors like Shelley who will not denigrate themselves to the darker instincts of human nature merely to advance their careers. Does anyone understand why thousands of women perpetuate the impression that, collectively, our gender has so little self-regard, that we allow the commercialization of our own sexuality to the deprivation of our humanity? Are we so repressed that we appear to accept this as "normal?" And why shouldn't actresses like Shelley and people like ourselves "bemoan" the depiction of women as the perpetual victim - and the more naked the better?

Well, there really are thousands of unsung women who do succeed by their own talents. Take, for example, 20-year old Manon Rheaume, a professional female hockey player. She was featured as "Sports Oddity of the Year" in the final article pulled from the Canadian Press wire services. The "attractive" (we have to mention that) Quebec goaltender has just signed a 3-year contract with the present Tampa Bay Lightning club of the NHL. The "Oddity" story was prompted when she became the first woman to see action in a regular-season professional hockey game, on Dec. 13. She played the first five minutes and 49 seconds of the second period and allowed one goal while turning back three other shots. Coach Gene Ubriaco left her a note on her locker, "have a cigar, now you're one of the guys." There's more. One year ago, she was offered $50,000 to pose for Playboy — sans equipment. She turned them down with an emphatic "not even for a million dollars would I consider such an offer."

Despite the "Oddity" label, Rheaume's accomplishment and her flat refusal to Playboy has brought 1992 to a refreshing close on gender issues.

By comparing all four articles, we see the inherent hazards of being female in these decidedly misogynistic times, but as well, how only one genre of the media shapes our thinking in seemingly innocent newspaper articles in our own . The reporting could have been more positive: "Award Winner Styles Hair for Real Women", instead of an implied "This is How You Babes Should Look." And in place of the trite "Unzippedy do da", how about "Designers Grin and Bare U$ Again," rather than praise their unusual artforms hung on their android-like models. Replace the term "Bemoans Degradation of Women" with "Rising Star Shows Moviemakers How It's Done." For the final article, which trivializes the goaltender's success as "odd," substitute "How To Stickhandle The Playboys." These suggestions are easy for the average Jane and Joe to make, as we are free from advertisers who help pay T-C staffs' salaries. ▲

Tafelmusik

Part 3 of a 5 part series

by James Young

I am afraid that the principal justification for Tafelmusik's third Mozart disc is economic. Sony wanted an original instruments version of Mozart's most popular work in its catalogue so the world was treated to yet another recording of Eine kleine Nachtmusik. The overtures recorded here provide the perfect introduction to Mozart's operas for that (apparently very large) segment of the entry-level classical market which does not like vocal music. Personally, whenever I hear an overture, I want to hear an opera. If, however, you do not have a recording of Mozart's ubiquitous serenade and like Mozart but not opera, this is the disc for you.

Surprisingly, by the standards of original instruments orchestras, the tempi employed in the overtures are rather restrained. The tempi employed in the overtures to Idomeneo and La Clemenza di Tito are, virtually to the second, the same as those adopted by John Elliot Gardiner in his recent recordings of these operas. Arnold Ostman's recordings of the three Da Ponte operas (Figaro, Don Giovanni, and Cosi fan tutte) use considerably faster tempi. Ostman's Cosi overture, for example, crosses the finish line in 3:51 while Weil's version strolls in at 4:44. Tafelmusik's Magic Flute overture is also considerably slower than that on the new recording by the London Classical Players, led by Roger Norrington (6:27 opposed to 5:58). These tempi are not altogether successful. They are too fast to be courtly and too slow to be playful.

On balance, I prefer the versions of the Da Ponte overtures done by Ostman and the Drottningholm Court Theatre Orchestra. (Remember, though, in order to acquire these, you must buy the whole operas.) Ostman leads a slightly smaller ensemble which works better for this music. At times Tafelmusik's versions seem, by comparison, though only by comparison, a little overblown. Clearly Weil and Lamon were trying to enhance the drama of the works, and they were successful. The overtures to Cosi and Figaro benefit, however, from a very light treatment. The principal mood to be expressed in insouciance and this calls for a small ensemble and brisk tempi. In both of these overtures Mozart employs the winds, particularly the oboes and flutes, to great advantage. Taken at a run, the wind parts can convey a mood of fun, almost of giddiness. This is not to suggest that Mozart's operas are not profoundly serious works: one need only to think of the great arias of the Countess in Figaro and Fiordiligi in Cosi to see that this is not the case. But the reference point should be good humour, since this is Mozart's own reference point. The bigger, more dramatic sound of Tafelmusik works better for the overture to Don Giovanni, particularly in the dark introductory section of the piece. This opera has, however, a very different character than the other two Da Ponte operas. This is one opera where too much insouciance is decidedly out of place. ▲

Little Miss Carriage!
Touch & Go

Not as altogether jarring, but I ain't no virgin to them either. Didjits have it together with their pot-fuelled dragrace core. You can almost write a Didjits review without listening to the damn thing because they are so consistently good. No exception here.

Godflesh
Cold World
Earache/Relativity

Godflesh, the masters of alterni-death releases, have done it again. This EP featuring the title track, an old song ("Nihil") and two remixes thereof, is great for any of you death-heads who need a change of pace. The drum machine sounds the same in every song, though. You might be disappointed for 10 bucks. If so, gimme a tape and I'll record if for you. It's a cold world.

Fonzie

The Bughouse Five
Solid
East Side Records

Listening to the Bughouse Five's new CD for the first time, I decided I didn't really like it all that much. Most of the songs sound almost identical and the lyrics aren't anything spectacular. However, the combination seems to work because I found myself repeatedly listening to the CD, and subsequently louder each time. For some strange reason, this band sounds much better when it is loud enough to knock things off the walls and really annoy the neighbors.

Although I don't know much about this band except that they recorded in Vancouver, I'm looking forward to any new material from them. All in all, from the past-paced "Solid Gold Easy Action" (my personal favorite) to the surprisingly mellow last track, this is an enjoyable album, and worth checking out.

Grand Puba
Reel To Reel
Elektra

As most hip-hop fans know by now, Grand Puba Maxwell has left the Brand Nubians to pursue his solo career. His first album entitled Reel To Reel is now out in Canada on Elektra Records. This is a nice sounding album, the choice of samples is original and the tracks come off having a sixtyish soul sound and Puba shows and proves why he's considered to have some of the finest skills in rap today. He can flow to a track like no other MC. Standouts on the album are "Soul Controller" and the title track. Check dis out.

Pipsquak

Jackie Janzen & Travels With Charley
Grinning Tree

This is an easy one to get into. The songs are delivered in a free-flowing natural style that shows Jackie Janzen and Steve Mitchell are completely comfortable playing folk, country and blues styles. This is all original material, as well. What makes this release so enjoyable is that simple melodies are embellished with just the right amount of extras: interesting harmonies, convincing blues howls, and terse punctuations with guitar and dobro. Victoria's own Doug Cox handles backup vocals and dobro on this cassette.

Both Jackie and Steve are former members of the Vancouver R&B group The Festive Eddies. This release is quite a departure from full blown R&B however; it is on the acoustic blues cuts such as "Troubled House Blues" that show off Jackie's potential as a singer. A band isn't necessary.

Jackie and Steve appear frequently in Victoria. If you get the chance, check them out. If you want to have a copy of this fine cassette for your bad self, write to #4-1110 Victoria Drive, Vancouver, B.C., V5L 4G5. The only problem with this cassette is that it only contains 6 songs.

Kreviss
Kreviss 7"
Scratch Records

The third published release from Kreviss, "Unveiled", although slightly monotonous, is a very soft and pretty song. Whereas "You Think" is a more climactic Sonic Youth-esque jam with fucking awesome vocals. Kreviss are eight women and one male that rule live- two drummers! Yes! Impressive and different- do buy.

Jason Flower

Sparkmarker
3 song 7"
Final Notice Records

I've been waiting so long for this to come out. Powerful vamps of heavy "Dischord" overtoned music. They're great live, the vocals pierce right through the music. Great packaging-compliments on the booklet, Kim. "Touchdown" stood out the most.

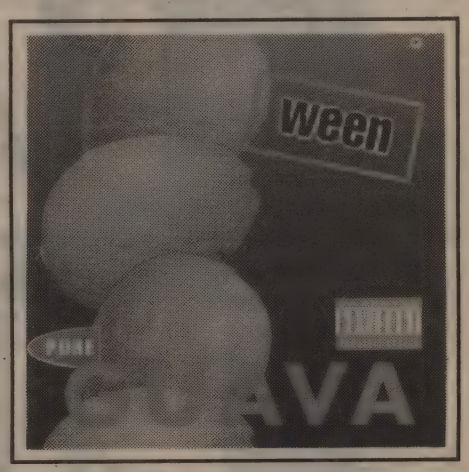
Jason Flower

Star Pimp
Treasure Trail
Boner Records

Damn! They played January 8 in Vancouver, and since there really is nowhere to play in Victoria, they neglected to take the trip. This six-song CD is an indication of a very musically colorful, twisted band. It almost borders on psychedelic except the hallucinations are real, not contrived. So catchy it makes one nervous. Guaranteed if you were to hear this blared frequently out of car stereos there would be many more traffic accidents.

Star Pimp carries the Boner torch into the weird and creative without being too lofty or pretentious. As usual, you have a brain, so find out what you're missing.

Stephen Dohnberg



Ween
Pure Guava
Elektra/Warner Bros.

Oh yeah, it's a major label release, and therefore I was greeted with a parental advisory notice. Fuck off. Anyways, there are very few bands one (being me) can assume immune to even some minor style redirection that seems to come with a major label deal. They are: the Melvins, Steelpole Bathtub, the Butthole Surfers and Ween (and a small handful of others).

To go on, the nitrous-soaked parody of this amazing band is impenetrable. Ween, in their own brilliant way, offer stoned allusions to everything from Sinead O'Connor, Asia, Prince, Marley, Bowie, Styx, Rush.... You name it, and it's probably been digested and regurgitated into beautiful new forms. None of that Weird Al satire shit though. Ween undertake their musical offering with a unique and accurate interpretation of our fucked up world. This analysis is too inadequate anyway so take some money, buy any Ween release you can find, set aside your self-righteous, straight-edge, ultra-conservative, cliche- and rhetoric-ridden pretensions and get cooked with Ween, 'cause you're all gonna fry anyway. Stephen Dohnberg ▲

Lunatic JUMPS TO VIDEO

by Jahnathan

The Lunatic is a new video release from Island Movies. Set in Jamaica, the soundtrack features reggae and soca music performed by Toots and the Maytals, Donovan, Admiral Tibet and other Caribbean stars. The film follows a crazy Jamaican named Aloysius. In the opening segment, Aloysius is seen outside a public school house listening to the class learn the meanings of multi-syllabic words, which he repeats to himself and eventually adds to his name in a long list: Aloysius Idiomatic Gossamer Longshoreman Technocracy.

Aloysius lives on the property of Herbert "Busha" McIntosh, a wealthy white man. "Busha" is obsessed with finding a final resting place, away from his family plot in the nearby town of St. Ann's, where his grave would be "wee-weed on" by goats and cows. However, his wife is adamant about them both being buried in St. Ann's.

A large German woman appears on the scene and takes Aloysius as a lover. That's when the fun really begins. To say much more would possibly spoil the enjoyment of a very entertaining movie.

All the acting is top-notch, as is the script and direction. Close attention must be paid to the often amusing dialogue, especially for those not well-versed in Jamaican patois.

This video is available at your nearest video centre. Enjoy! ▲

FUZZiN' OUT with Amazing Larry

"Amazing Larry on Canadian Fuzz `Zines"

I suppose the tern "fanzine" could apply to any publication directed specifically towards the "fans" of something. But I think most of us Offbeat readers think of fanzines as being associated with some kind of alternative music. In the non-commercial music world, fanzines are a necessary feature, as they provide the only form of promotion many of these bands will ever get. They range from the expensive glossy-paper and colour format 'zines to the classic (and much more common) stapled photocopied fanzines. In the world of garage, the fanzine is essential for spreading the words, sounds and looks unique to the movement. Important garage fanzines of the past and present include Freakbeat, Ugly Things, 99th Floor, Kinetic Vibes, Misty Lane, and Bucketfull of Brains. In Canada, there are three main garage fanzines: What Wave, Feline Frenzy, and Cryptic Tymes.

Feline Frenzy is definitely the most 60's-ish looking of the three. Editor Glynis Wilson has a real flair for mid-60's fashion, and her 'zine is always crammed with old magazine ads and graphics depicting fab guys & gals in groovy gear. The bands reviewed in Feline Frenzy are given huge praise in the best 60's fan tradition, and only the really "retro" garage bands make it into the 'zine. Glynis has been a big promoter of garage bands for many years now. Her long running radio show, The Fuzz That Was (similar to CFUV's Garage Grooves), kept her home town of Toronto hip to all the new and old bands in the scene. Feline is still in full swing, and you can get hip by writing to Feline Frenzy Teen 'Zine: c/o Glynis Wilson, 160 Huron St., #501, Toronto ONT., M5T 2B4.

The best-known Canadian garage fanzine is What Wave. Over the years, editors Dave and Rena O'Halloran have brought to light some of the best garage (and other) bands from all over. Many issues of What Wave included free tapes and 7" records. The 'zine gave birth to the What Wave record label, which has put out a Minstrels EP, and that great compilation album Mr. Garager's Neighborhood. Although predominantly a garage fanzine, What Wave has in the past offered reviews to rock, punk, and rockabilly/country acts. Other strange features of What Wave include "Pigshit" by Gary Pig Gold, and that bizarre wrestling section entitled "Rasslin". According to the latest issue, many back issues of What Wave are still available for order. Write to: What Wave, 17 Erie Ave., London ONT., N6J 1H9.

Somewhere between the purist 60's format of Feline Frenzy, and the more open-garage-door themes of What Wave, is the relatively new Cryptic Times. Issue #4 just came out, and offers insights to all the latest garage and garage-related bands worldwide. Regular features include "Videodrone", a look at B-movies and underground video releases, "Ear Piercing Powerpop" (formerly "Ear Piercing Punk"), "Lysergic Library" and "House of Wax". Former 14th Wray drummer, Alan Wright, is the editor of this one. It originated in Kingston, but has since moved to Vancouver, and as I understand it, will soon be moving to Seattle. Get Cryptic by writing to Cryptic Times, P.O. Box 4402, Vancouver B.C., V6B 3Z8.

Also, look out for Victoria's first garage fanzine, YETI! Issue #1 should be out by this summer. And listen to all the latest in the world of garage first-hand, by tuning in to CFUV fm 102, Saturday at midnight for Garage Grooves with yours truly. Keep groovin. ▲

by Chris Vance

Starting Mondays, 1:30-2:00 pm, CFUV will begin broadcasting the news and views of the revolutionary generation in CFUV's newest show entitled Into the Streets!. This public affairs show wastes no time in merely describing the horrors of injustice and global capitalism, but rather cuts to the chase by covering real action being actively taken to force immediate social change. Our format is interviews, commentary, reviews and a very funky theme song.

Issues to be discussed this month include, alternative health care and combatting the established medical elite's death fixation; the right to reproductive choice and defending abortion clinics; book reviews; alternative publication overviews; and activist announcements.

The program hopes to key into the Victoria activist community by providing a media outlet to discuss tactics and means of furthering the struggle. Since the laws of the land do make sedition a crime, we take it upon ourselves to test the limits.

There are no sacred cows. The student movement and politics of ecological defense will be questioned and argued without the bent of anti-leftism nor the snare of blind acceptance to the alternative establishment. And we haven't even mentioned the activism surrounding the resistance to continuing Canadian colonialism on Native Nations. The list of ideas and issues is endless, as is our fight for stronger communities, overall respect and active empowerment.

Hosts Jezabel, Tom and Chris can all be reached through CFUV. Just say fight the power and they should know who you're asking for. Into the Streets!, on Mondays 1:30-2 pm. ▲

Flickering Cinecisms

by James Vitti

Hi, I'm James Vitti and this is Flickering Cinecisms: a review of movies on the screen or on the shelves.

This year's 1993 Victoria International Film Festival opened with Passion Fish from independent screenwriter and filmmaker John Sayles. Sayles personifies the determined director who by necessity infiltrates the landscape of multi-million-dollar projects. He sees two kinds of financing: the "right" money and the "wrong" money, the difference being the director's final say over a movie designed to make nervous people money.

Most often Sayles invests his own cash from film royalties, screen plays and acting gigs in other independent features.

His first employer, exploitation filmmaker Roger Corman survived on negotiated advances. By recycling everything from sets to stock footage, a three picture contract would have its entire budget on the screen by the last picture.

By comparison to moguls like Zemekis or Lucas, renegades like the late John Cassavettes or Robert Altman just make more movies whether they have the cash or not.

With this year's Victoria International Film Festival, Mike Gower of Cinecenta and Howie Segal of the Roxy Cinegog, local mavericks themselves, have pulled together some of the more singularly committed movie making.

Contrary to the popular image of the B-movie producer-director, making a film without significant financing requires a disciplined realism about the craft. Critics are still marveling over Nick Gomez's Laws of Gravity and its $38,000 price tag. Satisfying what John Sayles calls the formal exercise of writing for a low budget production, Gomez tells the story of a couple of street punks and a sudden infusion of handguns into their neighborhood. With its evocative dialogue and the pan and scan of a single take Laws of Gravity has a documentary look.

With the ever expanding offerings of reality programming on television, witnessing the "truth" has become a prerequisite for any film. There's been a blurring between the distancing entertainment spectacle and the inevitability of personal tragedy. So throughout the schedule of the Victoria International Film Festival weaves a commitment to a cinema of jarring accessibility.

Not surprisingly, women directors who, by definition, are low budget independents, offer the most challenging of the Festival's cinema verité. These are uncompromising documentaries too real for commercial television.

Barbara Kopple's American Dream is the dynamics of a bitter strike fought over jobs held hostage to deep wage cuts.

Shot with some of Victoria's own landmarks, Forbidden Love presents the '50s underground lesbian culture through suggestive pulp fiction like Venus of Lesbo.

Monika Treut, the director of the life affirming pornucopia My Father is Coming, interviews four women. Conversation ranges from the healing potential of sex to the plastic nature of gender boundaries.

Even a docudrama like Brenda Longfellow's Gerda, the "party girl" who brought about the downfall of two members of Diefenbaker's cabinet, demonstrates the disquieting cost effectiveness of reality.

Inheriting the high risk inventiveness of the North American independent, is the latest generation of filmmakers from Hong Kong. These four Chinese films comprise a high energy mini festival at the core of the International Film Festival.

Nothing is unusual about a fortnight separating the wrap of a film shoot and its theatrical premiere. For the Festival's Once Upon a Time in China II, director Tsiu Hark left himself only five days for the final edit, to dub dialogue and to mix sound. Hark infuses late 19th century power politics in China with hyperkinetic action sequences.

For anyone who has seen all three instalments of Ching Sui Tung's A Chinese Ghost Story, they know not to fear sequels. His Swordsman II devotes as much flash to its transsexual magic as its swordplay.

Huan Yu Shan's Twin Bacelets is unique in being the first lesbian coming-of-age film produced on mainland China.

In Center Stage, China's greatest star of the silent cinema, Ruan Lingyu comes to embody the growing fear facing Hong Kong as the year 1997 and with it the reunification with communist China approaches. Like the Festival itself, this unconventional bio-pic is a collage of historical evidence, dramatized reconstruction, raw documentary and speculative fiction.

The 1993 Victoria International Film Festival will be showing many more films. Some include Sven Nykvist's ethical dilemma entitled The Ox and Stephen Gyllenhaal's poetic journey into a family's past portrayed in Waterland.

Most movies are exhibited at both venues. Check the Festival's complete listing for locations and show times. The Festival runs until March 11th.

Seventh Stone & The Bourbon Tabernacle Choir
Harpo's Cabaret, Jan. 22/93

Dave Wall is mingling with the rest of Bourbon Tabernacle Choir and the three members of Victoria's Seventh Stone before he goes on to perform. Seventh Stone have just come off stage, proving that they don't play great blues for a bunch of young white guys, they just play great blues. Wall mentions that he is excited. He carries in his pockets one rubber band, a twenty dollar bill, a note for the guestlist, the keys to his Toronto apartment, his passport (which is the only piece of ID Wall owns that has his picture on it), Stephen Sondheim lyrics, a ticket stub for a New Year's Eve concert at Toronto's City Hall (the stub has written proof that Dave Wall is, in fact, an "Artist"), his health card, and finally a cassette featuring the singing talents of Brian Wilson's wife, Marilyn. Kate Fenner is drinking a Kootenay True Ale, and talking to guitarist Chris Miller. She says that her favorite album of 1992 is Main Offender, by Keith Richards, and that her favorite Toronto band (other than Bourbon) is The Rheostatics. Chris Miller takes a size nine and one half shoe, and was recently able to get an almost brand new pair of Greb Kodiaks from his father in exchange for a big glass of soda water. He expects to be giving the boots to his son, if he ever has one. Miller enjoys home-made pasta. Seventh Stone arrived at the show in a Volvo four door sedan. They smoke Benson and Hedges Blacks, and look like they are about twelve years old. Dave Wall's final words to me were: "It's better to be rich and healthy, than it is to be poor and sick." Bourbon then took command of the stage and the audience at the same time, proving to everyone why they were booked for three shows when most bands are only booked for one.

Colour Out Of Space & Melvins
Harpo's, Feb 15/93

I knew, partially, what people were in store for with Colour Out Of Space. Pearl Jam, Helmet and Soundgarden. This band, when they made what, as far as I knew, was their stage debut last April in Sidney, garnered more respect from me than almost any local band ever had. In fact, they reminded me of the Melvins in a remote sort of way, and it struck me that they could evolve into something even better. Of course, only I and a select handful of others felt the same. The others were there to see the Dayglos and Shutdown (certainly nothing against those bands), and Colour "didn't have enough energy" for them. This negative response led them to drop Jason Bonneau (Pigment Vehicle) from the vocal position and pick up this new guy, and then write eighth generation Seattle imitations because they're "more accessible" (read "more like Cream of Wheat"). On this night, they had no business being up in the band room with the privilege of possibly being able to walk upon Buzzo's shed ear hair. To top it off, the singer, in announcing their last song, said something like, "Stick around for the Melvins. They'll blow you away." As if anyone but your guestlist jock pals wasn't praying that you'd get the fuck off the stage and find a worm hole to shrivel up in. Colour no longer has my support, nor, evidently, that of the majority of the early bird crowd.

First, Dale appeared. What, is that his kit? Sure, that's the biggest tom I've ever seen, and there's a fire bell in place of one of the cymbals, but that looks like a kit I saw at a garage sale next door. But it's Dale! Hey, there's Buzz! Oh my god, it's Buzz! Wow, I didn't even notice those stacks! He's all dressed in red! Hey, where's Joe? Hey, who's that? What's going on? Anyway, for some reason Lori showed up to play bass (she's in the Ozma sleeve picture, holding the cat). Right on! They all looked incredible. Lori started banging "Eye Flys", Dale hit everything simultaneously once every 20 seconds, Buzz started feeding back, and the show was on. This first set was the "slow" set, where they also played "Vile" and an inordinate number of songs I didn't recognize. So they must be the new ones! A new album! On Satan, I mean Warner Brothers. We'll wait and see on that. And I must mention that my friend Scab noticed that Buzz at some point played a slide guitar using a Duracell battery.

Then they started the second set with "Nile Song" by Pink Floyd! What an unbelievable song for them to cover. They played "Zodiac", the best song ever written. They played the best, most fundamentally heavy set ever played. They are the best band that has ever lived. They certainly are far more than Harpo's deserved. I'm serious! This was pretty much the most significant event of my entire life. And I got a shirt! On the side, I'm glad they didn't overdo the Kiss thing. One of their shirts had an allusion to Kiss, so I didn't buy that one. Dale ended the whole thing with an agonizingly slow and thunderous reverb-ridden bass drum solo at the end of "Night Goat". He put on his clothes, got up and said, "Hi, I'm Dale. Goodnight." I turned around and realized none of the crowd had gone home yet. The Melvins left us all wanting more, and when's the last time you walked out of Harpo's without being glad it was finally over? My faith in music is restored. My broken neck will heal.

Mr. Sunshine & Martensville & Pork Queen
Hump House, Jan 30/93

Three one-man bands in one night! Here's how it went: I arrived and paid my three bucks and then had my wrist assaulted with a Banana Royal rubber stamp. I stood there, drinking my soy milk, waiting for the first band to start. Dammit, I thought getting there at 9:30pm would be quite early enough to catch the opener, but I was mistaken. From all accounts, Mr. Sunshine (Noah from Banana Royal on bass) was extremely impressive, and I have no reason to doubt this claim. I'll have to catch it next time.

When I arrived, Martensville (severe apologies for last month's misspelling) made its appearance. It's still heavy and it's still fun to watch Ron dance around but man! does it ever sound like Godflesh. He got Soma from King Salmon to sing one again but that didn't work out because the mic kept feeding back. But then Ron himself sang one, and that's what a lot of us wanted to hear. All of us Infect and Drøne fans were delighted. All the TV commercials Ron (audio) taped to play before and after the set were mildly agonizing. The fun part is thinking of puns to yell at Ron to see if you can make him smile. Anyway, I still want a tape.

Then the Pork Queen from Vancouver came out. He had his instrument case full of things like a kid's bicycle horn, a ukulele and a little harp, and he had a record that teaches kids not to let strangers touch their private parts. It seemed like he was setting up for a really long time, but actually that was the show. Experimental free jazz, I guess. That's fine, but the only fun we had was yelling puns at him too. Then he huffed some nitrous and danced around, and the show was complete. There are Pork Queen records around, so find one and support your local freaks.

Wait, the show didn't stop there! Hump decided to play, since their bassist, Dale, came back from Vancouver for the weekend and they hadn't jammed together for a while. Also they were scheduled to play the Cruel Elephant six days later. So they played, and it was Hump. The nitrous bottle went around and whoever was standing up enjoyed watching people writhing on the floor, being blinded by the slide projector and deafened by the sampler. The show ended with nobody left standing except me and Scab.

Please, people, go to the Hump House next time they have a show. It's not cramped or hot or anything and I can't remember ever being really bored there. And they guys need to pay their phone bill eventually.

THE WOODEN LARYNX SHOPPE

A True Radio Story

by Don Bergland

Dexter Hanlan was a moderately successful radio announcer in Spewford, B.C. He was a good announcer and had a following of dedicated listeners. Although he generally considered himself traditional, conservative, and a supporter of the status quo, he always felt a certain thrill when he was challenging established beliefs. Little did Hanlan know that he was soon to allow the hell fires of pride to enter his life and dominate him with the obsession of unchained human passion.

It all began when he took a new route home from the radio station one day. As he strolled along, he passed a store he had never seen before. In the window were beautiful old-fashioned, traditionally styled wooden larynxes made of pure oak, spruce, ash, maple, and mahogany. They were beautiful. He had only read about these in books and heard about them in stories passed on to him by his grandfather. But here in front of him in the window were wooden larynxes of classical style and quality worn by people who lost their voices by accident or in battle. Hanlan was indeed impressed. None of the currently popular plastics or flashy metals. Just old-styled larynxes of pure wood.

Hanlan spent the better part of the waning afternoon just examining the spacious show window. He would study a blue spruce larynx until his eye would blur and then he would bring them back into focus on a new wooden masterpiece. His eyes would unfurl along its woody surface, as he dreamed of the soft hollow sound it would make while talking, or the expressions of admiration it would elicit from friends and acquaintances.

During the month, the Wooden Larynx Shoppe was never far from Hanlan's mind. He walked by it every day and spent his afternoons pressed against the window, enthralled with the display of wooden larynxes. It got to the point where he hated having a good larynx. He cursed his affliction. Why was he born with great vocal cords and a finely constructed larynx. Why couldn't he have been one of the lucky ones who had larynx problems or defects? He began to hate his voice.

One day, Dexter Hanlan could restrain himself no longer. He decided to go in the Shoppe and look around. Why not, he asked himself. They were beautiful works of art, and he was only interested in looking or perhaps in touching one, or two. Perhaps he could even hold one against his throat. He opened the door, and entered. In the next few moments, he would take a step into the world of egocentric hell fire. He would experience a desire that would alter his life forever. As he stood there looking around, his heart skipped a beat in sheer joy when he saw the sign above the counter. It said, "Surgical amputations performed free with the purchase of any wooden larynx." ▲
